

designing a world of hope

These last few weeks have been busy—but good.

We had a wonderful time at the Missionsfest Alberta in Edmonton. It was great to run into some of you! The girls had a terrific time at the children's program, Michele got to go to some seminars on igniting children's hearts for missions, and we spent many (many!) hours talking about Engineering Ministries International. Kevin mostly manned the booth along with our interns (and the occasional volunteer), while Michele wandered through the other booths to connect with the other ministries. We ended up with a dozen solid ministry contacts and many more potential volunteers. Please pray that these organizations and individuals follow through on their interest—so often, missionsfests are information overload! It is encouraging that eMi is becoming known among the other ministries and they are seeking us out for more information. Pray for Kevin and the others as they travel to Missionsfest Toronto this weekend, where they'll be introducing eMi for the first time. Engineering Ministries International is such a unique ministry, that it tends to cause quite a stir when it debuts at a new missionsfest.

We've also been excited about the progress of the eMi Canada website! It's been "live" for a few weeks now, though, of course, we're still tweaking things here and there. But if you haven't been on recently, we encourage you to go take a look: www.emicanada.org. The website is really our main tool to reach volunteers (hey, it's how Kevin originally found eMi . . .) so it's great to have a new look and an easily updateable format. Let us know if you find any typos . . .

The third bit of news is that Kevin's project trip for this summer has been confirmed: he'll be heading to Danja, Niger to work on a Fistula Clinic. We'll provide some more info in the next newsletter, but for now, feel free to check out the project profile listed at www.emicanada.org/projects.shtm.

Thanks for your interest in what we're doing, and thanks for your prayers!

blessings,

Kevin, Michele, Talia & Kaisa
